Cindy's Shoe

It was one of these sunny, quiet and peaceful mornings just as Cindy liked them. No hurry to start the day. It was Sunday. Cindy did not have to go to work. She felt well in her small flat. She had decided to have breakfast (1) on her tiny balcony and had already put a little basket of fruits and a jar of orange juice on the table. The croissants in the oven would be ready in a minute.

From the balcony she had a nice view on a small sandy beach and the sea. Some people were strolling alone or with friends or relatives. Some were jogging in company with their dog. Kids were happily running along the beach (3).

Cindy fetched the croissants, opened the apricot jam jar and started to breakfast. While eating she was swinging her legs. A quicker movement brought one of her light sandals to fly between the balcony bars. It fell down and landed on the head of a young man who was passing Cindy's house. He looked up, Cindy looked down! It was love at first sight! Cindy ran downstairs, opened the front door and after a few apologizing words invited Patrick to join her breakfast.

Since that time Cindy and Patrick are happy together and they regularly watch the sunsets from the large terrace of their house. They keep watching the sun till it seems to turn into a black ball at the horizon (2).
